And were Nancy a debutante, no matter how good a time she had been having all days in New York, will return home mur D. G., for it has been a strenuous

But tonight at least there will be something different, and that will be the Glendinning military ball. Even while we were at war and everything was so military, no one thought of a military ball, even as a charity affair. It remained for Mr. Glendinning to think of it, carry it out and make it a private one, which he himself would give for his daughters and the 100 active members of the First Troop of Philadelphia City Cavalry.

I do think it was a great idea and I am not original in my remarks. I always get excited, as you know from my having told you before, if I even hear the bugle of the troop, let alone see one of those figures in buckskin and dark blue bedecked with stripes and chevrons with heavy fringe, that looks like the fringe our grandmothers used to edge the parlor lambrequins with, and see also that wonderful helmet with its insignia and the great strip of bearskin fur rising up from the back.

And, oh, the excitement of helping brother or father or uncle or son into

Well, to go back to the ball tonight. Colonel Glendinning, who, as you know, was in the aviation service, and is of course a member of the troop itself, and his wife will receive, and they have saked Captain Cadwalader, Lieutenant Clem Wood and Lieutenant Flo Rivinused and his wife to receive with them.

There will be a number of dinners before the ball, including one given by the War, are staying for a few weeks at the Bellevue-Stratford.
